

CHAPTER I.

The reader of the following tale is required to conceive that the events contained therein happened in the year 1800, on the bridal night of the Count Ernest d'Offen, and the Lady Clara, daughter of the Baron de Werthe, and that the opening disclogue is carried on between the former and the hereditary Prince of Brandebourg.

"Nay—but your highness must first promise to name it no living being—not even to the Lady Clara, as it is not yet a thing."

"Well, Ernest, if you so desire it, I pledge my word."

"Harken then, and give me joy!" and as he spoke, Ernest, Count d'Offen drew from his bosom, opened, and read the following letter:—

"After five and twenty years of exile from my native land, I learn my sovereign has proclaimed my pardon. I am informed a great general, whose fame has reached me in my obscure retreat—the Count Ernest O'Brien—is the child of my most unhappy marriage, and the cause of my exile and return. Should it be no delusion, I may yet be happy—by seeing this avenging angel, I shall retire to the claims of my first love, the Countess de Wrensen, which, alas! my own fortune has state. I write this to you, I would like please letters to restore me to my son. I may press him by my heart, and I enter the dwelling of my forefathers."

D. OTTER,

"My dear Ernest," continued the prince, "his friend ceased reading, "is laid from my very heart, I give you joy, and I will leave you to induce me feelings on that subject."

"I inform you at the very moment I was planning in my own mind how I could break to you the news, which I had deemed indisputable of your father's death."

"The stranger!" exclaimed Ernest.

"I have this day," the Prince continued, "had an interview with Bertram, the eldest ab-accompanied your parent in his flight. He informed me that the wretched villain Volk, his foster-mother, who procured his condemnation, hunted him out in his way, and with the most barbarous determination mortally wounded him."

"Most extraordinary!" ejaculated the

"Not so," returned the other, "everything is now explained—the faithful valet, himself wounded in defending his lord, was conveyed by some peasants in a so-called stute to a neighboring village, where, after a protracted confinement of upwards of a month, he pro-

"That is possible, certainly," agreed Ernest.

"Ah! my poor—poor father," cried the young man, for the moment giving way to his melancholy thoughts, that crowded on his mind at the recollection of his parent's micrins—"how are you" from abroad; and by whom? by you from when you were friendly to the deepest gratitude and friendliness! But I must part from you, Augustus," he said to one Poore in an altered tone of voice—"It is already close upon the hour of seven, so I must hasten to the baron's castle. "Make such excuses to my lovely wife, accounting for my absence as your fancy can invent, until I am enabled to plead my own. In promising to her my long-lost parent's adieu, my prince, and see you keep my secret trust!"

"But stop, Ernest! stop!" exclaimed the

"Any thing on earth you please," except the truth," replied the count. "You may say, I—but we! the Lady Clara is dying; occasion! say what you please! adieu!" and he spoke he hastily released his arm, and hurried from the room.

"Pleasant task, upon my honour, this—and easy too," muttered the prince when he was left alone, "to frame excuses to a newly married lady for the absence of her lord upon her bridal night! well so it be then," saying this he leant against a marble pillar where he stood in which posture we will leave him waiting the appearance of Countess d'Offin, in order to obtain the while a retrospective glance at the Ferdinand, the hitherto proscribed Count of Offin.

When yet an infant in his cradle, he had, by the cunning of his nurse, been supplanted in his rights by her own infant, Ferdinand Folk, (as individual already named). This woman was much esteemed in the count's family, in consequence of which her own supposititious son (in reality the count d'Offen) was permitted to reside at the castle, brought up with the wretched heir of Offen, and treated in all respects as though he were his brother; in addition to which the strong resemblance which their parents bore to one another, increased the feeling of regard the old Count d'Offen entertained towards his own, though unknown child.

When this secret had been successfully practised for upwards of twelve years, the mother of the feigned count was associated with an illness which eventually terminated her existence. On her death-bed, strung with remorse for the crime she had perpetrated, and with a view to save her soul from purgatory, she was led to make a full confession of the fraud she had so long maintained.

Having left so many years earlier, the name of son, the father of Ferdinand d'Offen could not turn the innocent impostor from his door: and though his own child was instantly restored to his right and station as the heir of Offen, the foster-brother was not sent adrift. The old count felt too strong an affection for the boy to thrust him that that would be absurd to say he did not feel the difference—there existed the change—the great overwhelming change—from the offspring of the Lord d'Offen, to the offspring of his nurse!

Folk heard the annunciation, and felt the shock seize them all without a murmur, but change among the

the existence of the fact which produced that change, did not the less rankle in his heart. He was aware that any superficial show of malice would but render his situation worse, and as an alternative, he cloaked his feelings under expressions of apparently sincere regard, and became a deep and secret ture righypocrite. The daily noble acts of confidence and kindness on the part of his foster-brother, were received by Folk with abundant external demonstrations of gratitude, while his heart yearned but for the downfall of his benefactor.

Suffice it to say that the way in which he evinced the integrity of his protestations, was,

Time rolled by, and the young men advanced in years, the similarity of their forms and features growing more remarkable as each named: and so they attained the age of 1 eighteen, he count died, leaving Ferdinand heir to all his honors and estates. His first act when he assumed his parent's title, was to settle on his loose r-brother a competency for life, and shortly afterwards succeeded in obtaining for him a highly honorable military post.

The Wisconsin
Department of Health Services
has announced that it will be conducting a survey of the health status of the state's elderly population.
The survey will be conducted by the Department of Health Services
in cooperation with the State University of Wisconsin-Madison.
The survey will
be conducted in three phases.
The first phase
will involve a
survey of the
health status of the elderly population
in the state.
The second phase
will involve a
survey of the

pearl belonging to the Shah of Persia, seen by the author in 1933, was valued at 32,000 tomanes, equal at the time to double the number of pounds sterling. It is said to have been obtained at Catifa, in Arabia. It was a pearl fishery existed in the time of Ptolemy. It is a pear-shaped, perfect in all respects, and nearly 4 inches long. This pearl is believed to be the one which was possession of the late King of Persia, Fatah Ali Shah.

large pearl in the crown of the Emperor Hadolph weighed 30 carats, and was the size of a pea. (?)

Lee X. bought a pearl of a Venetian jeweller for the sum of £14,000. A lady in Madrid, in the year 1700, wore an American pearl which cost 31,000 ducats.

large Java pearl, curiously set, was shown at Paris a few years ago. It was made to represent a mermaid, drawing her hair; her body was round of the pearl, which was of a long oval form.

the most beautiful pearl known is in the Museum Zoologica in Moscow. It weighs very nearly 28 carats. It is perfectly globular, and so beautifully brilliant that at first sight it appears transparent. It was brought by Zonina at Laysan, of a captain of an American ship. This splendid pearl, which has been is the French crown jewels there are some very fine pearls. Among others, a collection of 400 pearls, each weighing 15 grammes, of a perfect white, round, and of a magnificent orient. They are valued at £2,000. Also a pearl as large as a pigeon's egg, of a very beautiful quality, valued at £1,600, and others less value.

The statistical tables relating to the emigration and immigration from and into the United Kingdom in the year 1877 have been published by Mr H. GOSN, in his report thereon as Secretary of the Board of Trade, page 110—

In sub-mitting the usual tables of emigration and immigration for 1877, I have to notice a change in the figures as compared with those of 1876 and 1877. The numbers of emigrants are still small as compared with former years, but instead of showing a continued tribution, as was too true. The net emigration, that is, the number of emigrants less the number of immigrants, has also increased to even a greater degree, the number of immigrants having been again slightly less in 1976 than in the previous year. The emigration has remained less than it was in 1975, in which year there had been a great decline from previous years; but the low figures of 1976 and 1977 have not again been touched. This result is arrived at whether we take the figures of emigration and immigration in

As regards the gross emigration the increase in the number of emigrants in 1978 as compared with 1977, has been: Total number of emigrants in 1978, 117,862; ditto, 1977, 119,971; increase, 2,109; amounting to about 2 per cent. on the numbers of 1977. Excluding the foreign element, i.e. reckoning only the persons belonging to the United Kingdom, the figure are:—Number of emigrants of British and Irish origin in 1978, 112,902; ditto, 1977, 95,193; in-

As regards immigration the corresponding figures are:—Total number of immigrants in 1870, 81,868; ditto in 1875, 77,031; reduction in 1878, 2,197. Number of immigrants of British and Irish origin only in 1878, 83,630; little in 1879, 84,900; and a slight increase in 1880, 87,916. It is true that the total immigration has increased since 1875 as compared with 1877 that emigration itself has decreased. The corresponding statistics for emigration in 1876 and 1877 were—(1) as regards the total emigrants and immigrants, 44,665 and 35,123 respectively; and (2) as regards emigrants and immigrants of British and Irish origin only, about 35,000 and 31,300. The statistics for 1880 show a considerable increase in over those of the two previous years. The amounts, however, are still small in amount. It is impossible

Board turn their attention to us and let our native come and live on our road, and then soon be something thought of. It is to see the little children in wet weather, through water in school their feet are wet all day is the result? Come! I begin to think what has often been said, not half the men and are practical men, and the study common cannot do a trifling thing without it being pa. Nearly all that the Board has done has been suggested. When we send men, or rather, they seek such a situation, they promise to be able to do it, and attend to all these matters, why do we give an eye to their doings?

Q. Has the Board put some flags edge way up on our noses for church steeles, and keep placing signs on our heads to lay out more money anywhere we need it? Is that the way they run the show?

A. Not at all. I don't think it is needed; also rise the high road stick with a sign. Well they will say, what would you suggest?

HOUSE CHICKEN CLEVER

Annual meeting of this club was held at Castle Inn, on Saturday night; a substantial supper was provided, about 100 members attended. The following were the simple justice to the good things at

On the absence of the President (Mr. H. Moorhouse was the chair. After the usual toasts, a man called upon Mr. Lee to read a report, which showed that the club had had a successful year; the 1st Eleven had 25 matches, 6 were won, 11 lost and 13 drawn; most of those drawn being in its favour; the 2nd Eleven had won 12, lost 11 and 5 drawn. The prizes

CONCERT AT LOFTHOUSE.

ROTHWELL HARMONIC v. DONCASTER ASSOCIATION.
On Saturday last the above teams met on the ground of the former Club. Doncaster being known as a club the home team were prepared to have a tough game, and so it proved. The ball was kicked off at 10 o'clock and for some time the play on both sides was so good and even, that some thought Bucklea good chance. Once or twice in the first half of time the Dooncaster goal was in danger, but the splendid defence of G. Bailey averted the same, and the ball was driven towards the Rothwell quarters, where a goal was obtained by a beautiful kick from near the corner, passing just below the cross bar of the goal. The ball was again set in motion, and Rothwell tried hard to make the game equal, but to no purpose, and at the call of half-time Dooncaster had obtained one goal to Rothwell nil.

The room was about three parts filled.

After a little rest the ends were changed and they resumed, and had the Rothwells into backfield and other up in better style, we have no hesitation in saying that the game would at least have been a draw. However, no other goal was obtained although both ends were very often in danger, the Doncaster goal especially so at one time, in fact, many seemed to think a score was near, but G. Bailey showed his class and a terrific save was made, and the contest of the field. The weak point of the Rothwells team seemed to be their want of a good dribbler, the passing being very good.

For the Doncaster team, F. Frith, J. Rhinbold, W. Clark and G. Bailey played well, Frith especially so for the Rothwell team. H. Taylor, U. Field, S. Brown, G. Blakey and W. Harrison did good service.

The following are the teams:—Rothwells; and

The game at first was very steady and both sides played well, the ball being taken backwards and forwards from one goal to the other, at the call of half time nothing had been scored. The ball again went into motion both sides worked very hard, but eager to secure a goal. Just as at last goal was runners in the field, giving the first half back and succeeded in obtaining a goal, the only one of the game. The half again was in mid-air and the home team tried very hard to score but to no avail though some very good shots were tried. On the end of the time visitors proved victorious by one goal only, owing to the whole team having played splendidly. Hartley's play giving great satisfaction.
